The community as the leading partner

Knowledge, priorities, participation and care for identity.

Knowledge that sustains life

Mujeres de la Tierra, Mujeres de la Periferia: the Collective is building a space for learning, cultivation, cooking and sharing knowledge. Energy is understood through those activities and the care and safety they need, before choosing a technology.

A co-creation relationship

Participants are not recipients of predetermined equipment. They identify needs, set priorities, compare options and agree how to use and care for their choice. Facilitation makes room for different voices and for changing direction.

The exchange with Agua Clara

Through the project, Agua Clara enabled a representative of the Collective to join a three-day exchange to explore other solar energy systems and projects. It sparked interest in the connections between energy, soil regeneration and water, strengthening support networks and new questions.

How to share without exposing people

Publish learning and agreements without precise location, private accounts or contacts. The project video has explicit authorisation to be shown; other files require their own review and consent. Taking part does not require appearing in records.